As with the evidence related to the transactions that occurred on March 29, 2000, Williams and Burks' presence at their parents' home does not absolve them of liability. Evidence was presented that Williams and Burks were present in their parents' house the evening before a loan to Rittenberry was made and that the proceeds of the loan were directly deposited into the business account of Rittenberry's store, a store that Williams and Burks owned and managed. Defendants' actions in conjunction with the loan clearly demonstrate that they used their children to help their enterprise make loans and to obtain money for the benefit of the enterprise, which is the purpose for the application of civil RICO. The evidence also showed that Defendants approved of their children's activities. Burks approved of his son's involvement with the enterprise, because he approved of his son's loan to his business. Closer to the July 23, 1999 transaction in question, Miller informed his son that there was no problem with having a loan application made out to their parents, and, in fact, he approved of the loan. In addition, Miller approved of a second loan made to Rittenberry's store, despite the fact that he was not involved in the application of the loan. In fact, Miller testified that he approved the loan because he had a personal relationship with his son, Raymond. Defendants' contention that the loans in question were only "personal" loans is belied by the evidence. There was evidence that, while the facades of these transactions were purported to be "settlement of accounts" from the sale of paint and brushes, all of the money was actually deposited into the business account of the store. In addition, the conversations and actions of Miller and Burks, in conjunction with the July 23,

The use of glucocorticoids to treat psoriasis is one of the oldest and most effective means to treat the condition. Consequently, non-steroidal alternatives are a current focus of research. The glucocorticoid receptor (GR) plays an important role in the etiology of the disease and could be a putative therapeutic target. Thus, the inhibition of GR-dependent transcription by targeting the DNA binding site and GR corepressor binding site in the DNA binding domain and the ligand binding site of the ligand binding domain of GR is currently of interest. This article reviews the current research surrounding the use of glucocorticoids and GR as a potential therapeutic target for the treatment of psoriasis, in particular, whether the expression and function of GR can be targeted in the treatment of psoriasis.Turkish Coffee First introduced as an exotic import, Turkish coffee is highly caffeinated coffee made from a combination of traditionally processed Arabica coffee beans, dry roasted over charcoal or heated bricks, and ground into a dark, frothy, and heavily textured brew. While many Americans were introduced to Turkish coffee by the first wave of Turks who populated Ellis Island in the late 1800s, the art of drinking this classic coffee originated in Turkey. Turkish coffee is now served in nearly all coffee shops in the world, from Istanbul to Cleveland, and is considered a treat. A practice that is still followed in Turkish households, coffee drinking is often associated with tradition, and as a custom, part of the daily routine. According to the Turkish Coffee Associations, the ritual of the day begins with the breakfast coffee ritual, and ends with the traditional end of the day coffee ritual. These two coffee occasions are simply the most important aspects of the Turkish coffee ritual, and are typically celebrated with friends or family. Both the morning and the end of the day coffee rituals are followed with coffee ceremonies, also known as hamam. The Turkish coffee ceremony includes several key actions and methods. First, participants are served a small cup of hot Turkish coffee or tea, which is traditionally served in a small, shallow,
